HOW A BRIDEGROOM GOT LEFT.

A Nap in a Smoking Car Parts a Newly Wed Couple.

He left the bride and went into the smoking-car. This, he calculated, would prove to his fellow-travellers that he was an old married man, related the Boston Herald.

After he had puffed awhile at his cigar the excitement of the day tended to make him drowsy, and with a few preliminary nods of the head he fell fast asleep.

He shivered for about half an hour, as he thought, and when he awoke he saw no one else in the car and the car was not moving.

The first thing that entered his head was an accident. He jumped out and rushed on the platform. There was a conductor and inquired what had happened.

The conductor seemed puzzled and asked hubby to explain. The wife did not know what had happened, so the conductor laughed heartily, and then informed the newly made husband that the bride had been side-tracked by the conductor, who had been waiting for the train with hubby's wife had started along about forty minutes ago.

Well, he didn't know what to do. At last he got up and went to the conductor, who told him that his only course was to telegraph in the next station and have his wife sent off there. He could not do this, however, as he was due in three minutes and must meet her.

This advice he followed. After bidding the conductor a fond goodbye, he ran to the station, where he met his wife with outstretched arms waiting to receive him.

And as he showered kisses upon her she exclaimed: "We have had a double union in one day."

TRAP-DOOR SPIDER.

Can Reconstruct Its Web Only Five Times.

How many times can a spider rebuild its web? This question seems to have been unanswered with reference to most spiders, but not to the trap-door spider builder. These spiders are very plentiful in California. They construct their nests consisting of a smooth tunnel, leading down to a large and spacious chamber, longest, deepest and most deeply buried in the ground. It is protected from the washing effects of rain, and covers the nests with a woven trap-door covered with a hunk of earth's composition.

The upper surface of the door is made to resemble the surface of the ground. If any one disturbs the door, the owner instantly opens it, and if the disturber is too large and strong, the spider retreats into its den. On the contrary, the intruder is a formidable enemy, the spider claps the door to and holds it down with all its strength.

The result of many experiments, as reported by Mr. Cleveland of San Diego, shows that if the trap-door is disturbed, the spider will retreat into its den. It just five times and no more; but each time there is evidence of a greater exertion on the part of the spider, although it will attempt the same task again. Sixth time, it invariably fails because its silk has been exhausted.

It is, however, that after the lapse of a considerable period of time the spider acquires a fresh supply of the fluid from which it spins its web. Then it goes to work again, constructing silk-lined dens and trap-doors.
